JUVENILES

offenses before their cases come to trial.

"Right now," Williams added, "all I do in the way of juvenile delinquents is a home investigation, to see which referral service we may use when the juvenile is brought to court."

Williams added that the number of referral services in Texarkana, Ark., that could be used to aid in the local rehabilitation of a juvenile offered the courts and the probation officer additional choices in the final solution of juvenile problems.

Williams listed the Texarkana Mental Health and Retardation Center, the Model Neighborhood social worker's office and youth councils in the Model Neighborhoods, along with Model Cities Youth Planner Tom Hawkins.

Purifoy said the juvenile court, which meets once a month, has an average docket of 17-19 juvenile cases per session.

Williams said the number of juveniles on probation increases at a rate of "two or three per month" with juveniles already on probation ending probation periods and keeping the number at a steady annual average.

The work he does with juveniles who return from the state training schools involve counseling and what he calls "after-care." The purpose of after-care, he said,is to help the juvenile determine not to return to the state training schools, which Judge Burgess termed the "most extreme form of punishment the juvenile court hands down."

Williams said the average requirement for a juvenile on probation, either from the state training schools or from the local juvenile court is that the juvenile meet with the juvenile officer once a month. Williams said one of the state juvenile probation officers, Weyland Loveall, who serves the Western section of Arkansas, lives in Texarkana also.

Williams said that one of the major juvenile delinquency problems his office and the courts will face this fall will be that of truancy. He said habitually truant students are referred to the courts by Arkansas-side school system attendence officer Rodolph Carpenter.

Habitual truancy, Williams believes is a sign of learning problems that often develop into behavior problems as the child reaches the end of his adolescence.

Williams said adequate counseling and an effort to give the juvenile the initiative to study and obtain adequate education may aid in the prevention of habitual truancy that would lead later on to behaviour problems and criminal violations.

Williams cited the Model Cities dropout program as a possible aid for juveniles who have quit school.

Purifoy graduated from Arkansas High School and received his undergraduate degree at the University of Arkansas, and his law degree from the University of Mississipi.

Williams, a graduate of Arkansas High School, received his undergraduate degree at Centenary College in Shreveport, La., and his master of divinity degree at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky. He also received specific training in counseling after he accepted the post as full time Miller County juvenile probation officer. He also taught school in Kentucky.

Bombers Hit Foreign Offices In Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secret Service agents and Washington police searched Sunday for the persons who set off bombs outside two foreign government buildings here late Saturday night.

A Secret Service spokesman said explosives of an unknown type were set off in front of the Portuguese embassy and the Rhodesian Information Office shortly before midnight. No one was injured, and damage was light.

A group which said it is at war with all white nationalistic governments claimed responsibility for the two bombings in a letter delivered to The Associated Press office. Police confiscated the letter before it could be opened but later released the contents.

Neither the Portuguese Embassy or the Rhodesian office had an immediate comment on the bombings.

There was no one in the Rhodesian office when the bomb exploded. A Portuguese embassy official said a maid and servant were in the Portuguese building at the time of the blast.
